

Travel and weather: not always a welcome combination

Rude waiters in Perth, hurricanes in our forests, being blown away in Berlin, hungry kids in Paris and a warning not to go to Bali. Something different this month.

With the Easter holidays past, and hopefully the terrible and sometimes destructive weather too, we can look forward to the summer holidays. Lucky Editor Liz Crawford as already had hers in Australia and tells us about it. OzCon member and forest owner Georg Rappold tells us how damaging the recent hurricane-force winds were to Austria's forests while Brett Bayly relates how the strong winds provided a fast return from Berlin. Amanda Grant kept pumping her kids with pastries in Paris while Big Brother, the Australian Foreign Affairs Department, warns us to keep clear of Bali.

Perth to be more specific

After a long absence I was beside myself with anticipation of returning to my beloved country! Our beautiful country is well known for its beaches, open spaces, funny accent and wonderful warm climate, but not at all known for its service and after such a long absence it hit me right between my eyes.

I am referring to the service, or to be more specific, the lack of service in Perth. Others say it's much better in Sydney and Melbourne. I actually went to Melbourne for two weeks in early March and am glad to say it was somewhat better but still doesn't compare to Europe.

Within a couple of days I had already collected what I can only refer to as a hilarious list of things that just didn't gel.

The first and probably worst story I have to tell is sitting in a cafe on a Saturday morning just having finished a wonderful breakfast. The empty plates had been sitting on the table for a good 20 minutes when we ordered another round of coffee. When the waiter came over with the new coffee, I just sat there and thought to myself "where on earth are you going to put them". I asked politely "could you please take the dirty plates?".

Anyone with half a brain could see that the coffee cups were NOT going to fit on the table. He just looked at me and said "If you'd just give me a chance". Well to say I wanted to poke his eyes out would be an understatement.

I went into a shop on Rockerby Road in Subiaco. I found a great skirt that I wanted to buy. They didn't have my size and the lady said she can get my size from their Applecross store. Thinking to myself well Applecross to Subiaco it about 10-15 kilometres so it should be here this afternoon or tomorrow, I asked the lady when it would arrive and she said it would take a week. I mean hello, this is not exactly an international delivery.

Again a shop on Rockerby Road Subiaco. We walk in and have a look around. Nothing of interest so off we go. We were polite and said goodbye as we left the shop. The lady said "Oh I am sorry but I have just found two grey hairs that I had to pull out". Oh my god, please tell someone who cares and by the way we were too scared to ask exactly where she found the grey hairs! Don't even want to go there.

All of these experiences were shared with my good friend so they have served us well as we have spent hours laughing about them. All in all Australia is a wonderful place and you can't help but love the people, but sometimes that Aussie "I don't give a s—t" attitude can rub you up the wrong way.

Hurricanes "Paula" and "Emma" Sweep over Austria Climate change and its effects on Austria's forests

Devastation caused by the hurricanes

After the heavy storms "Kyrill", "Franz" and "Olli" in 2007, Austria has been hit again by two hurricanes this year, on 27-28 January and 1-2 March. The two hurricanes with the lovely names of "Paula" and "Emma" caused immense damage to buildings and infrastructure across the whole federal territory and thus also affected the biosphere.

They also caused considerable monetary losses for the forest and landowners through heavy windfalls.

In Austria, about 8,3 million cubic meter of timber was damaged or destroyed, mainly in the states of Styria and Carinthia.

During the storms the wind gusts snapped the trees in half like matches and because of the irregular snapping most of the timber can only be used as fuel woods and/or paper production.

Such damaging storms can affect multiple areas: for example the timber prices are heavily affected in the negative made worse by the heavy costs of the clean up. Needless to say, these clean ups can at times also cost human lives.

These two factors make it more difficult for the forest owners to cover their general expenses. Due to continuing changes to the climate and the large temperature variances, hurricanes are likely to be more frequent and this will be a challenge to the sustainability of Austrian forests.

Trees breaking like matches

Blown away in Berlin

Visiting Berlin in late February can always be a bit risky so far as the weather goes. But we did it and two out of three days weren't bad. In cool but sunny conditions we did the tourist bit and saw the Brandenburg Gate, Check Point Charlie, remnants of the Wall, the Reichstag, the holocaust memorial and the Potsdam Prussian palaces.

The third day was left for some shopping. Well, that's when the hurricane-force winds arrived across central Europe, and so it was a day of ducking from one store to another trying not to be blown over.

Our big worry was whether the flight back to Vienna would get off the ground that Saturday evening. But after an anxious wait of about an hour due to the late arrival of the aircraft we got away. The flight from Vienna to Berlin took one hour and 20 minutes. That evening it took only 55 minutes to get home!

There are some good packages available for short trips to Berlin and other places near Vienna. One tip in Berlin – pay €20 and spend the day on the hop-on, hop-off double-decker sightseeing bus that circles the city.

Paris and Lake Como

Amanda Grant and family Michael Altenberger and daughters Isabella, Annika and Julia spent their Easter holidays in France and Italy.

Most Austrians thought we were crazy to drive through half of Europe. First stop was Paris as our middle daughter, Annika, is doing French at school and we want use every opportunity to keep her enthusiasm up, something we can't do so easily from Oz.

We booked an apartment in Paris's third district from the website www.ahparis.com. It was a great location as pretty much all the major sites could be reached on foot and with five people it is always nice to have more room to spread out. For Paris, I thought it was very reasonable at €150 per night.

We had been concerned as to what we would do with the car as parking is impossible and if you do find a spot you cannot guarantee the car will be in the same condition afterwards (I gather you don't leave the hand break on as it is considered a normal part of parking to bump the car in front and behind to fit into a spot). But there was a parking garage around the corner and for €25 a day we were glad to have it locked away.

We all loved Paris and found that the kids (at 11, 9 and 7) enjoyed the sightseeing as much as we did despite being tired and hungry. I think we ate our way through every patisserie in Paris, not a place to visit while watching your weight, but on the other hand it certainly made Vienna look cheap as eating out or just buying a drink was notably more expensive than here.

From Paris it was onto see family at Lake Como in Italy. We drove via Alsace and had two nice but cold days there, exploring the very quaint villages around Colmar. Lake Como is a very beautiful spot and all the smaller towns along the lake are very picturesque.

Be warned: avoid Bali

While we are on the subject of travel and holidays, thoughts are turning to the coming summer and plans are in the making. So be warned – do not travel to Bali.

According to the experts, not only Bali but Indonesia remains unsafe for Australians. This has been reinforced by remarks made by Islamic cleric Abu Bashir which were published last month. He has returned to his hardline rhetoric with a call for followers to "beat up" Western tourists and for young Muslims to die as martyrs.

In a sermon, organised by an Islamic youth organisation and delivered a few kilometres from the home village of convicted Bali bombers Amrozi and Mukhlas, Bashir likened tourists in Bali to "worms, snakes, maggots", and specifically referred to the immorality of Australian infidels.

The address was caught on video by an Australian university student.

"The youth movement here must aspire to a martyrdom death," said the cleric, who was convicted of conspiracy over the 2002 Bali bombings that killed 202 people, including 88 Australians, but was later cleared and released from prison.

"The young must be first at the front line - don't hide at the back. You must be at the front, die as martyrs and all your sins will be forgiven. This is how to achieve forgiveness."

It is not surprising that the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs continues to advise travellers to avoid Indonesia.

The DFAT travel advisory says: "We advise you to reconsider your need to travel to Indonesia, including Bali, at this time due to the very high threat of terrorist attack. We continue to receive reports indicating that terrorists are planning attacks against a range of targets, including Western interests and places frequented by foreigners."

The Department warns that despite recent arrests of high level terrorist operatives in Indonesia, terrorists are continuing to plan attacks which could take place at any time.

From the President

I think I heard on the radio that it was the coldest Easter in Vienna for more than 30 years. I can believe that. Those snow showers, sometimes while the sun still shone in the distance, and the cold morning temperatures were certainly unusual. And the pile up of 70 plus vehicles on the A1 autobahn during heavy snow was certainly no joke.

Wherever you were, I trust you had a good Easter despite the weather.

Some might say it is not very appropriate for the occasion. Perhaps so, but this was my favourite Easter card this year and it got a wide distribution.

Easter in Australia is a religious time for many and a holiday for all. It is also a time for what has become a custom in Australia, an argument over whether the Aussie motorist is being 'ripped off' by unscrupulous oil companies.

It happened again this Easter. The headlines read that once again the oil companies were going to lift the petrol prices just before Easter...up to a massive $1.50 a litre. Apparently prices did reach $1.47 in Sydney but it was argued that the prices were justified with the price of oil above $100 a barrel. The consumer watchdog, the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission, found motorists were not ripped off in the lead-up to Easter despite petrol price hikes.

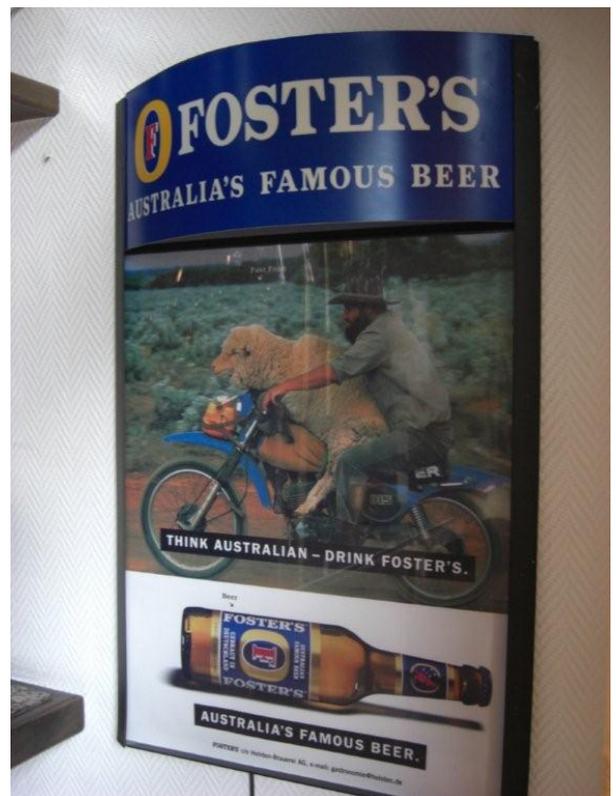

But it made me think. What are we paying here in Vienna for a litre of diesel? Well I noticed that prices over Easter varied between €1.20 and €1.30. At an exchange rate of €1 = $1.70 that works out at $2.04 to $2.21.

Oh those poor people back home, I thought. Just what are they complaining about? But there are other factors to consider. In Australia the car is absolutely necessary because public transport is often in poor supply, especially compared to what we experience here in Vienna. And distances are great. It is nothing to drive hundreds of kilometers, even thousands, over Easter and so perhaps there is reason to complain about high petrol prices.

But Easter has gone and so what's next on the calendar? Well for many Australians and New Zealanders it is Anzac Day and I want to draw your attention to this year's commemorative service at Karlskirche (details on page 5). Aussie or Kiwi or not, give thought to coming along to a service with a difference in a beautiful old church.

If you can't make the Anzac Day service, try and mix it with others at another religious institution of note in Vienna, Flanagan's Bar on Friday 18 April.

Cheers,
Brett

As we all know, Germans love their beer. They have the right to because it is so good. And so it was a bit of a surprise to find this advertisement in the foyer of a hotel in Berlin. But perhaps the advertisement was more about the imaginative Aussie character than the beer.

OzCon Events

Proposed tour of Spittelau thermal waste treatment plant

I have received emails from five people, some with children, saying they would be interested in this tour. However, timing is a problem for some and a minimum of 10 is needed. And so I have asked if we could have a shortened tour of about an hour, which includes a video presentation, during the lunch period. If this is possible another notice will be issued giving a time and date and seeking more participants.

OZCON WELCOMES THE GEORGE FAMILY

Hamish, wife Sonja, son Sam and daughter Grace think they doubled the population of Kiwis in Vienna when they arrived in September.

I'm sure there are more than just two families here (us and another family, plus one teacher who still has a gorgeous Kiwi accent after 20-plus years here, at the Vienna International School) but it's all we know of so far. But we can handle it.

We came to Vienna for a cultural experience and we are getting that and more. Not a great time to come, going from one winter to the next, but we will appreciate summer when it comes. (Could this recent gorgeous weather be the start???)

So we are from New Zealand, a green country full of space, green fields, beautiful scenery, millions of sheep and mostly non-smokers! (The people, not the sheep) I had to mention that because I just can't get my head around why so many people smoke here and no café or bar or restaurant is exempt. I won't start on the dogs in shopping centres....

Anyway we think Vienna is a beautiful city, lots to see and do and we hope to take in as much as possible, both here and throughout Europe, while we are here (not sure how long that is).

Our home town (New Plymouth) is pretty small, 60,000 people, but lovely - on the coast, great mountain nearby and awesome spot for the great outdoor lifestyle. The people are friendly too....

Our children are fitting in well, have coped wonderfully with the change, going from a little 300-pupil school to a 1300-pupil one but they do miss their weekend sport. We are just embarking on some Deutsch lernen so we can better immerse ourselves in the culture here and I was amazed to sit in my first class and be told that New Zealand was part of Australia (during a little 'where do you come from topic'). Don't worry, I put the record straight, there is only a rather large Tasman Sea separating us. And, can you believe it, the tutor asked me: "Are you sure its not part of Australia?"

Aussie News Briefs

30 March - FROM the Sydney Opera House to Rome's Colosseum to the Sears Tower's famous antennas in Chicago, floodlit icons of civilisation went dark for Earth Hour, a worldwide campaign to highlight the threat of climate change. The environmental group WWF urged governments, businesses and households to turn back to candle power for at least 60 minutes starting at 8pm on Saturday wherever they were. The campaign began last year in Australia, and travelled this year from the South Pacific to Europe to North America in cadence with the setting of the sun. (Sydney Morning Herald)

26 March – VICTORIA has signed off on the $10 billion Murray Darling Basin rescue plan. Agreement was reached between Victoria and the other partner states at Wednesday's Council of Australian Governments (COAG) meeting in Adelaide. Victoria had previously refused to sign up to a plan announced by former prime minister John Howard a year ago. Prime Minister Kevin Rudd said the Murray-Darling Basin Authority and the Murray-Darling Basin Commission would now be brought together in a new national body. (Farm Weekly)

26 March - THE Rudd Government is to slash the number of Specific Purpose Payments to the states from 89 to only five in a radical shake-up of Commonwealth-state financial relations. To be unveiled at today's meeting of the Council of Australian Governments in Adelaide, the new deal has been branded "modern federalism" by Treasurer Wayne Swan. The five continuing Specific Purpose Payments will be made in areas in which federal Labor campaigned extensively during last year's election: health, childhood education and schools, vocational education, disabilities and housing. (Canberra Times)

24 March - A woman has told how she swam into a monster crocodile and stared in its eyes during an Easter Sunday dip at Trinity Beach. Connie Verheyen, 55, thought she had stumbled across a log covered in barnacles as she did laps inside stinger nets. She soon realised she was face-to-face with the 3m-plus croc. Fearing the croc would attack her, Ms Verheyen said she turned and fled so fast she could have "made the Olympic team". (Cairns Post)

23 March - STEPHANIE Rice and speedster Eamon Sullivan have emerged as the power couple of Australian swimming. The 19-year-old Queensland girl obliterated the 400m individual medley world record tonight at the Olympic trials.. The outgoing swimmer was lapping up the attention after setting the mark of 4 minutes 31.46 seconds - some 1.43s below the time of American star Katie Hoff. She chopped almost six seconds off her best time to become the new favourite for the event at this year's Beijing Olympics. (Australian)

20 March - AUSTRALIA will salvage $40 million from the failed Seasprite helicopter program that has swallowed $1.3 billion of taxpayer funds. The federal Government and US defence company Kaman have satisfactorily agreed to cancel the project on mutually agreed terms. The Government today signed an agreement with Kaman that seeks to sell the 11 Seasprite helicopters, plus spares and training equipment, on the open market. (Australian)

19 March - ADELAIDE is at risk of relying solely on rain to fill depleting reservoirs amid warnings the city's water supply situation is at its most critical. The State Government yesterday confirmed Adelaide has only 47 days' supply – about 24 gigalitres – to pump from the River Murray from a 201-gigalitre "critical human needs" entitlement this financial year. 18 March - IT was, in the end, where the Germans had always insisted. The wreckage of HMAS Sydney has finally been discovered 66 years after vanishing off the coast of Western Australia. She is sitting proud and upright in waters more than 2km deep, 112 nautical miles west of Dirk Hartog Island. While the discovery of the final resting place of 645 Australian servicemen solves our greatest maritime mystery, questions about why it has taken so long to find her and what exactly happened on November 19, 1941, continue to bubble to the surface. (Australian)

17 March - AUSTRALIA has one of the least affordable housing markets in the English-speaking world and it is not just hurting young people wanting to buy their first home, new research shows. The AMP National Centre for Social and Economic Modelling report released today reveals the dream of home ownership is fading for many people. House prices have jumped 400 per cent between 1986 and 2007

while income has risen just 120 per cent. (Advertiser)

14 March - TOUGH new laws controlling solariums come into force in South Australia today, including bans on their use by children. Solarium operators also will be forced to turn away people with fair skin and display health warnings detailing the risk of skin cancer. There will be limits on the frequency and duration of tanning sessions, with the minimum age for clients raised from 15 to 18. (Advertiser)

14 March - ONE home was destroyed and nine firefighters were injured as Adelaide's record-breaking heatwave unleashed a bushfire emergency, threatening dozens of properties last night. The mercury in the city hit 39.7C at 3.18pm, meaning Adelaide had been hotter for longer than any other Australian capital on record. With its 11th successive day of 35C-plus temperatures, Adelaide achieved the dubious distinction of topping a record set by Perth in 1988. (Australian)

11 March - AUSTRALIAN cricket chiefs have announced that they had scrapped their upcoming tour of Pakistan, on the day two bombs tore through one of the cities they were due to play in. The tour, originally due to begin on March 29, had been in doubt for months amid questions about the level of security they would be assured in Pakistan, which has seen six major blasts since elections nearly a month ago. Cricket Australia (CA) called it a postponement and said they hoped to fix new dates "in the near future" for a tour. But it will not be this year. (Australian)

10 March - SPORTING groups and others could be stripped of public funding if they do not make an effort to curb binge drinking among their young members. The threat is part of a $53 million national binge drinking prevention strategy announced by Prime Minister Kevin Rudd today. The program includes a $20 million television, radio and internet campaign promising to shock young people with the consequences of binge drinking. (Age)

9 March - NED Kelly's last resting place has been found among bones dug up at the former Pentridge Prison site - solving an 80-year-old riddle. The grave site of Australia's most notorious bushranger was discovered after historians and archeologists unearthed an old Department of Justice document yielding a vital clue. Bone hunters during the week finally found an unknown mass grave where the remains of Kelly and other executed prisoners - removed from the Old Melbourne Gaol when it closed in 1929 - were interred at Pentridge. (Courier Mail)

8 March - THE cost of a range of basic grocery items has risen well above inflation over the past five years and industry experts warn that prices are set to increase further in 2008. The prolonged drought, soaring farm business costs, high grain prices and booming overseas demand for some Australian produce is putting pressure on food.
